

The Roche Group, a multinational healthcare company, wanted a single product for employees to work better together, from anywhere. G Suite helped meet this need.

The Challenge

Our two-different email and calendaring platforms have often been an obstacle for effective collaboration. To end these platform interoperability issues, the Roche Corporate Executive Committee made the decision that all employees will move to G Suite as the single common platform for the Roche Group.

When we evaluated new cloud-based solutions, Roche's Corporate Executive Committee was impressed with the outstanding service and rapid innovation of G Suite. G Suite will enable employees to work better together from anywhere.

"[G Suite] will allow our employees to focus on what matters most - saving patients' lives."

Dr. Alan Hippe
CFO & CIO,
Roche Group

The Solution

The way our employees communicate and collaborate is diverse, and our employees are spread globally. The integrated and socially-focused way that G Suite enables collaboration is very compelling, and we expect this to not only bring our company closer together, but give us a strategic advantage. Additionally, being able to deploy G Suite features by simply enabling them via a control panel versus planning for and deploying complex infrastructure in our data-centers will help us focus on our core business -- helping save patients' lives.

Employees will be able to access their email and documents from any web-enabled device, without using remote access systems such as VPN. This will make it easier for employees to work from home or on the go and it will reduce the strain on our IT support teams. Removing barriers to communication and innovation while enhancing mobile access is a key part of our Roche IT strategy.
